6-8: Answer these questions according to the passage below.

Brain-based research has confirmed that activities related to the arts, such as music, dance, and drama, are fundamental to brain functioning: in music, certain structures in the auditory cortex respond only to musical tones; in dance, a part of the cerebrum and most of the cerebellum are dedicated to initiating and coordinating movement; and in drama, areas of the cerebrum focus on spoken language acquisition. Integration of the arts into the middle school curriculum addresses not only students' expressive and affective needs, but also their cognitive competencies, including developing their ability to perceive relationships, attend to small shades of differences, understand that problems have multiple solutions, and see the world from an aesthetic perspective. Further, studies have shown that in schools where the arts are integrated, where all subjects are experienced through the arts, students have a greater emotional investment in their classes, and they work more diligently and learn from each other better. Language teachers are encouraged to integrate music, the visual arts, and movement into instruction, particularly at the middle school level, when students respond best to lessons that feature varied activities.

6. Which of the following is true about the brain's functioning?

- A) When it comes to learning, the brain responds best to music, and then to dance and drama.
- B) Learners benefit most from arts activities in school i different parts of the brain are activated at the same time.
- C) Artistic activities stimulate different parts of the brain and facilitate optimum learning.
- D) Further research must be done to prove that music, dance and drama boost brain functioning.
- E) Activities related to the arts serve more to meet students' expressive and affective needs than to improve their cognitive skills.

- 7. Which of the following is not directly mentioned as a benefit of incorporating arts into the middle school curriculum?
 - A) Developing a finer world view that attends to aesthetics
 - B) Developing better social interactional skills
 - C) Developing a deeper affective attachment to learning
 - D) Developing a better understanding that problems can have various solutions
 - VINI OHNAKSIZIN E) Developing a deeper appreciation of diversity in classroom activities

What is the primary purpose of the author?

- A) To explain the different functionalities of different sections of the brain \mathcal{C}
- B) To highlight the significance of integrating different forms of art into the middle school curriculum
- C) To justify why music, dance and drama are the best
- D). To identify the weaknesses and strengths of the current middle school curriculum
 - BY o underline the contribution of recent brain-based research to our understanding of brain functioning

9-11: Answer these questions according to the passage below.

There is a consensus among the teachers and researchers on the serious problems grades and grading create for the language learners. First, getting good grades can become more important than learning for the students; in other words, grades tend to focus students' attention on concerns about meeting demands successfully rather than on any personal benefits that they might derive from the learning experience. More importantly, grades may put students and teachers into two opposite camps and often make it difficult for teachers to follow modern, student-centred principles. In addition, grades may encourage cheating or uncritical student compliance since learners may be under extreme pressure to live up to the set standards. Furthermore, some researchers claim that grades sometimes are not applied for the right reasons. For example, in the field of language education, test scores rarely reflect the level of communicative competence since there is a lack of standardised assessment techniques to measure several crucial areas of this competence such as pragmatic knowledge or strategic competence. Finally, grades tend to aggravate social inequality as the strong get stronger and the weak get weaker.

According to the passage, how does grading affect students' learning process?

A) It shifts learner focus from a concern on meeting set standards onto the actual learning experience.

- B) It creates two camps, the teachers who favour it and the researchers who are critical of it.
- C) It undermines student-teacher communication and collaboration.
- D) It reduces the chances of cheating, when teachers use it as an incentive.
- E) It promotes a more student-centred classroom environment, especially in language education.

10. Which of the following is true about grading in language education?

- A) Some teachers give biased grades to students, which is a source of conflict in the class.
- B) It promotes learners' communicative competence.
- C) It fails to reflect the intended outcomes of the learning process.
- D) It leads to disagreement between teachers and researchers over the reliability of assessment techniques.
- E) It encourages more weight for pragmatic knowledge and strategic competence.

11. What is the primary purpose of the author?

- A) To show both the advantages and disadvantages of grading
- B) To inform the readers about the important problems caused by grading
- C) To warn the language teachers about the possible reasons for cheating
- D) To stress that teachers do not pay considerable attention to grading-related issues
 - E) To criticise the lack of standardised assessment techniques

12-14: Answer these guestions according to the passage below.

What teachers do in the classroom is to some extent determined by what they believe. The old-fashioned notion that a teacher's role is to transmit knowledge from the curriculum to the learners has been replaced by recognition that teachers have complex mental lives that determine what and how they teach. These complex mental lives, often called 'teacher cognition', are the hidden side of teaching, and multiple factors, which could loosely be described as teachers' knowledge, beliefs and personal histories, contribute to them. Introducing change to teachers, then, means addressing teacher beliefs because what teachers believe has an impact on how they teach. At the same time, however, it is important to remember that teacher beliefs and teacher behaviour in the classroom are not necessarily the same. Contextual factors can either facilitate or constrain teaching practice based on teacher beliefs. For example, language teachers are likely to believe that extensive reading has beneficial effects on language learning, and yet extensive reading is often absent from the teaching program. This absence may reflect factors in the teaching-learning context, such as assessment requirements or a lack of suitable reading resources.

12. According to the passage, what is the change in the attitude towards the teacher's role?

- A) They are now able to participate in the development of the curriculum that will be used during the teaching process.
- B) They will be able to apply a curriculum using a wide range of teaching instruments.
- C) They can reflect their own way of thinking in the classroom and regulate the teaching process accordingly.
- D) Teachers' personal views should not pose a threat to the transmission of the theoretical knowledge to the learners.
- E) The amount of knowledge they are required to have is determined by the curriculum.

- 13. Why does the author give extensive reading as an example?
 - A) To describe the common misconceptions teachers have about its benefits to the learners
 - B) To highlight the fact that teacher beliefs are more complicated than curriculum developers think
 - C) To draw attention to the lack of reading materials suited to learning objectives
 - D) To suggest an alternative type of assessment tool to evaluate learners' receptive skills
 - E) To show how teacher beliefs may differ from what teachers actually do in the classroom

14. What is the main purpose of the author?

- A) To provide an overview of how changes in curriculum design have affected the teacher's role
- B) To clarify how teacher beliefs can be an obstacle in the utilisation of certain learning tools
- C) To compare positive and negative effects of the change in teaching styles on learners' success

15-17: Answer these questions according to the passage below.

Three basic modes of linguistic communication correspond to different modes of perception: oral communication, the use of speech and hearing organs; writing, a visual representation; and signing, a visual or tactile representation. The most common vehicle of linguistic communication is the voice, and speech is thus a primary mode of human language, with some advantages over other modes. Because it does not need to be viewed, speech can accomplish its work effectively in darkness and in light, straight ahead and around corners. During the development of the human species, with hands and eyes occupied in hunting, fishing, and food gathering, speakers remained free to report, explain, promise, apologise, bargain, warn, and flirt. Speaking has other advantages. For one thing, the human voice is complex and has many channels. It has variable volume, pitch, rhythm, and speed; it is capable of wide-ranging modulation. Besides a set of sounds, speech takes advantage of the organisation of those sounds, their sequencing into words and sentences. Like writing and signing, speech can take advantage of word choice and word order. In its natural state, of course, speech evaporates and cannot span time, but modern technologies are making it possible to preserve speech indefinitely.

15. According to the passage, why has speech become the main mode of human communication?

- A) It developed much earlier than writing or signing.
- B) It does not rely on the immediate environment to take place.
- C) It allows people to do complex tasks like nunting more easily.
- D) It takes less time to communicate compared to writing and signing.
- E) It can be recorded and preserved thanks to modern technologies.

16. What is the disadvantage of speech compared to other modes of communication?

- A) People have to make their hands free to support speech with signing.
- B) Word choice and word order in speech are more difficult to monitor.
- C) It vanishes in spontaneous communication.
- D) It fails to convey the message in a tactile way.
- E) Its lack of complexity makes it difficult for us to construct long sentences.

17. What is the primary purpose of the author?A) To introduce three basic modes of linguistic

- communication and their advantages
- B) To emphasize that modern technologies are increasingly used to overcome the disadvantages of speech
- C) To describe how human species developed throughout history by making use of different modes of communication
- D) to explain briefly how different modes of communication influence human perception
- E) To point out the superiority of speech over other modes of communication, referring to its distinctive characteristics

18-20: Answer these questions according to the passage below.

It is widely believed that the degree of difference between learners' native language and the target language can lead to greater difficulty. The evidence supporting the hypothesis comes partly from the observation that it takes learners longer to reach a high level of fluency in a particular second or foreign language if that language is substantially different from the languages they already know, especially in grammatical aspects. For example, a Chinese speaker faces a greater challenge in English than does a speaker of German or Dutch. Language distance affects pronunciation as well as other language components. In 1999, Theo Bongaerts collected speech samples from many highly proficient speakers who had learned Dutch in their adulthood and who came from a wide variety of first language backgrounds. When native speakers of Dutch were asked to judge these speech samples, only those learners who spoke a language that was closely related to Dutch (for example, English, or German) were judged to have native-like accents. None of the speakers whose first language were more distant from Dutch (Vietnamese, for example) were judged to have native-like pronunciation.

18. One can understand from the passage that the degree of difference between the native language and the target language ----.

A) largely determines the level of ease or difficulty that a here is a learning the target language

- B) is unlikely to be noticeable for certain languages, such as Dutch and English
- C) has a more significant effect on the learning of grammar than the learning of pronunctation
- D) is less problematic for highly proficient speakers than speakers of lower proficiency
- E) negatively impacts the target language fluency most of the time, no matter what the native language is

- 19. According to the passage, the term 'language distance' refers to the differences between languages ----.
 - A) based on the levels of fluency that their learners can have
 - B) in terms of such linguistic components as grammar and phonology
 - C) stemming from certain factors, such as the number of their native speakers
 - D) resulting particularly from difficulties in listening comprehension
 - E) associated with sociocultural and geographical factors in particular
- 20. Which of the following can be concluded from the passage?
 - A) Dutch speakers could struggle more with English or German pronunciation than they could with Vietnamese of Chinese.
 - B) The most important predictor of success in foreign language learning is to have native-like pronunciation.

C) Whether a foreign language is learned in adulthood or childhood has a big impact on achieving native-like pronunciation.

- D) Mastering the structure of a language is not as significant as mastering its pronunciation to have a high level of fluency in that language.
- E) The less different a target language is from a learner's native language, the more native-like his or her pronunciation could be.

- E) $VP \rightarrow V (NP) (AdvP) (PP)$

30. The ---- meaning of a linguistic unit is its primary, explicit meaning that directly relates to the person, object, notion, event, or state it refers to in the real world. For example, when we look up the word bee in the dictionary, its main definition is 'any hymenopterous insect of the superfamily Apoidea, which includes social forms such as the honeybee and solitary forms such as the carpenter bee'. However, the word bee may mean 'hard-working' (a person who works diligently for a certain task like a honeybee that collects pollen and nectar to produce wax and honey) or 'talkative' (a person who talks a lot and sounds like bee buzzing). Therefore, personal or cultural associations might be connected to a word, and it can convey the speaker's feelings or opinions. Such an additional, indirect meaning of a word is called the ---- meaning of that word.

31. Maria is a teenager whose Portuguese parents came to London in the 1960s. She uses mainly Portuguese at home and to people at the Portuguese Catholic church and community centre, but English is more appropriate for her to use at school. She uses some English words when talking with her sisters about school or doing their homework. She uses mostly English in her after-school job serving in a local café, though occasionally older customers greet her in Portuguese.

Which of the following sociolinguistic factors cannot be observed in the given text?

33. The child is playing with a knife. The little one will hurt himself. Please warn the toddler to put it back into the drawer.

In the text above, 'the little one' and 'the toddler' are in some sense synonymous with 'the child', and they build a cohesive tie referring back to 'the child'. They share the same referent and have a similar meaning in the text. Thus, the occurrence of semantically related lexical items promotes cohesion

Which of the following cohesive devices is

34. When comprehending the sentence "The girl told the story smiled", the reader first encounters the noun phrase (subject of the sentence) the girl, and thus s/he immediately perceives told as the main verb and treats the sentence as the simple SVO (Subject-Verb-Object) structure. However, when the reader gets to the verb smiled, s/he changes his or her mind, or backtracks, and reanalyses told as the verb of the embedded participle clause, or reduced relative clause. Sentences that induce this backtracking effect are called 'garden path sentences'.

Which of the following statements explains the reason behind the garden path phenomenon?

- A) The reader makes multiple interpretations of a sentence when s/he first reads it instead of grouping the words of the sentence into a particular preferred structure.
- B) The reader's mind begins to perform syntactic parsing focusing on the phrases at the end of a sentence rather than those at the beginning.
- C) The reader's mind tends to choose the simplest structure among the different grammatical possibilities, so it may initially adopt a syntactic misanalysis.
- D) The reader generally gets the correct interpretation of a sentence when s/he first reads it even though it has some kind of syntactic ambiguity
- E) The reader's mind does not have enough of the right kind of memory capacity to keep track of each lexical item in a sentence.

35. It claims that the brain processes and represents language in centres that are devoted to particular sub-components of language performances, and thus specific parts of the brain perform specific language functions. For example, the French physician Simon Aubertin provided early evidence that the left frontal lobe was involved in speech production. Aubertin was treating a patient who had shot off a chunk of his skull in a failed suicide attempt, leaving a large part of his left frontal lobe exposed. Aubertin found that when he pressed on his patient's left-hemisphere frontal lobe with a spatula, the patient immediately stopped talking.
